Veterans’ Center opens at Metropolitan State
by Harvey Meyer

No one really understands what it’s like for a military veteran to transition to civilian life. No one, that is, except for other veterans.

That is the basis for a new, 950-square-foot Veterans’ Center at Metropolitan State University. The center, which will open this month, offers a refuge for veterans, a venue where they can receive support and share the kinds of experiences only others who served in the military best comprehend.

“It’s a place where they can connect with other vets,” said Bruce Holzschuh, the university’s veterans’ affairs coordinator who oversees the Veterans and Military Student Services office. “It’s a place where they can talk with each other and discover they aren’t the only ones who have challenges adjusting to civilian life.”

The center represents a natural extension of services already offered to veterans attending Metropolitan State. Holzschuh said his office commonly offers transitional counseling for those who stop by the second-floor office in Founders Hall on the Saint Paul campus. Another popular service is financial counseling to help vets grasp federal Veterans’ Affairs benefits. Holzschuh and another staff member also assist veterans in understanding their academic options and the various support services offered on and off campus.

“Vets want a place where they can get all their wants and needs addressed in one stop,” said Holzschuh, a Metropolitan State graduate and veteran himself who served 14 years as a Navy Seabee. “They are coming from the military, which offers a very simple and structured environment, to a civilian and academic environment, which often appears chaotic and stressful to them. It’s a huge transition, so we try to help them with that adjustment.”

The Veterans and Military Student Services office serves about 900 veterans, National Guard members and Reservists and their family members. Those serviced range in age from the early 20s to early 70s; about 20 percent are females.

“Veterans really fit in very well at Metropolitan State,” said Holzschuh. “Just like the veterans, the student population tends to be older and more mature.”

Plans are for the center to feature many of the creature comforts of home: several desktop computers, tables, lounge chairs, a large-screen TV, DVD player, refrigerator, coffeemaker and microwave ovens. It will be decorated with U.S. and POW-MIA flags, a large map of the world that will designate where veterans served, and a variety of artwork.

A formal dedication ceremony for the center is scheduled for this fall.

Dayton’s Bluff a century ago: some 1910 events  by Steve Trimbble

Writers often like to do retrospective articles, looking back at what was happening 25, 50 or 100 years ago. So I thought it might be interesting to do the same and check out a few events from a century ago. Some of them seem to have been real historical landmarks, while others just make for interesting reading.

Business Developments
A 1910 article in the Pioneer Press reported that Dayton’s Bluff Commercial Club had declared its desire to develop “a factory district” in the neighborhood, pointing out that the area already had 18 major organizations along the railroad tracks. They included Herzog Iron Works, Malleable Iron Company, the Griffin Wheel Works and the Gribben Lumber Company. The commercial club had been pleased with two of the big economic events of 1910.

The first was the fact that the Seeger Refrigerator company, started by a Dayton’s Bluff family, made a major change in 1910. In that year they purchased the old Born Sash and Door Factory at Arcade and Wells. A decade earlier, John A. Seeger and two of his sons had partnered with a cabinet maker and established the Seeger Refrigerator Company.

The business prospered but had been working in inadequate facilities on East 7th Street. According to the Pioneer Press, the company had around 60 employees at the time, but felt that the number would soon rise to 125.

The second event was the new building of the company. It was completed in 1910 when the builder was the “Pharo” company. According to the Seeger family, the building was made for better work and improved space for management affairs.

Politics and the Law
Herbert P. Keller was elected Mayor of St. Paul in 1910. He had grown up in his family home on Eichenwald Street and attended Van Buren Elementary and St. Paul High School. He became an attorney and in 1904 won a place on the city council where he remained until his campaign for higher office. While running for mayor, he said “I went into politics first as a sort of an experiment. I wished to see whether or not a young man could mix in it and hold office and yet keep his shirts clear.” Many people today are asking the same question.

Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Building One in 1910
They did expand and within a decade manufactured around 2,600 wooden ice boxes a year. Also in 1910, the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company (now known as 3M) left northern Minnesota and came to Dayton’s Bluff to manufacture sandpaper. They located on Forest near Faquier—today’s Bush Street—along with Warren Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad.

The company occupied its new brick building in the spring of that year. The structure was not large, but the most it could afford at the time. Soon afterwards “The Mining” had a legendary crisis. Two of the managers doing an inventory had the large numbers of 100 pound bags of abrasives materials on the first floor.

That even the night watchman was startled by a loud noise. The fact materials on the first floor. The total weight of the bags was 9,000 pounds. The bags were 500 pounds each and 50 bags total. The bags had been placed in the basement.

Harry Blackman arrived in St. Paul in 1910 when he was two years old, grew up in the Dayton’s Bluff neighborhood, where his father ran a grocery store. He attended Van Buren Elementary School along with Warren Burger, who later became Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. They also were in the same scout troop.

Harry graduated from Mechanic Arts High School in 1925. He attended Harvard where he got a B.A. and a law degree. He was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court by President Richard Nixon in 1970 and remained on the bench until 1994. He is usually remembered as the justice who wrote the Roe v Wade decision, but scholars point to several important cases with which he was associated.

Everyday Events
Not all of the people were as prominent as Keller and Blackman, but the names of many residents appeared in print at the same time. The Pioneer Press used to have a society section in every Sunday edition. Since it was arranged on a neighborhood basis, it is easy to ferret out fragments of folk stories. A large share of noticing concerned the activities of a large variety of local women’s clubs. Here’s a few examples from the spring of 1910.

According to the paper, Mr. and Mrs. Silas Gohsman of Bates Avenue “will move to their summer home at Bald Eagle Lake this week.” Mrs. Murphy of Hastings Avenue hosted a gathering of the Ladies Co-operative Club of the Atlantic Congregational Church on a Thursday afternoon. Miss Evelyn Miller of Plum Street entertained the I.O.M. Club while Mrs. J. M. Nugent welcomed a meeting of the Crystal Club into her Bates Avenue home. The paper said that Um-Zoo-Wee Club met at the residence of Mrs. Henry George, but never tried to explain what the name of the group stood for.

Miss Maud Bennison, who had been visiting Mrs. F. J. Plondke of East Fourth returned to Le Mars, Iowa. Incidentally, Dr. Plondke’s car was stolen in May of 1912. It was quickly recovered in what the paper described as a case of “joyriding”, probably perpetrated by juveniles. By the way, the Plondke house is now partially occupied by Sage Holben, whose neighborhood-building projects were featured in a Star Tribune article on the ninth of July.

Neighborhood Organizations
Things were rapidly changing in community during the first decade of the twentieth Century. Like today, various groups were trying to cope with the demands of challenging times. One of them—The Mounds Park Improvement Association—is thought to have been founded in 1910.

The purpose of this organization, one publication said, was the “building of it together of the residents of Mounds Park and vicinity for the study and discussion of all questions relating to the advancement of their interests, such as the settling of the district, transportation facilities, fire and police protection, lighting of streets and homes, grading and improvement in streets when necessary, good roads, street crossings, the suppression of nuisances, the procuring of better educational facilities, and all matters pertaining to the general public welfare of this district.”

There you have it—or at least some of it. A few of the highlights of the Dayton’s Bluff neighborhood a century ago. And these were just the things that appeared in the newspapers or some other form of historic documentation. Do you ever wonder what will be written about this year in 2110?

Pioneer Press

Dayton’s Bluff homes often have a rich history that invites the current occupants to speculate about previous residents and how the house has changed over the years. Thanks to the Ramsey County Historical Society (RCHS), it’s now easier than ever to find that information. In June the RCHS Research Center moved from a tiny office in the Landmark Center to four rooms in the basement. It also expanded its hours. Located in the Landmark Center at 75 West 5th Street, the RCHS archives are open from 10:00 am to 4:00 pm, Monday through Thursday.

The largest single archival collection at the center is the St. Paul building permit collection. That’s one of way of finding out more about a house or building in the city. Other collections include city directories, maps and atlas, photographs and other papers and records, some dating back to the 1860s.

Visit the RCHS site at www.rchs .com or call 651-222-6701. The staff can help you by phone, by email or in-person. A fee may apply to obtain copies of some records.

New help for researching your home’s history  by Carla Riehle  Forum editor

A Popular Puppet Production  by Forum staff

Someone delivered leaflets to most of the houses in the Mounds Park area in July. No, they weren’t from any of the gaggle of candidates for the senate seat. Instead it invited people to show up at the back yard of a Cherry Street house to attend a puppet show at 11:00 am on July 10.

An intrepid staffer from the Forum attended, assuming it would feature a group of neighborhood children. It turned out to be the production of a group called “The Open Eye Figure Theater.” Located in Minneapolis, this was part of what they call a “driveway tour.” They usually do around 90 shows a year in the Twin Cities.

This season’s annual playlet, called “A Surprise for Little Grandpa,” was held behind the home of Holly and Peter Windingstad. It featured colorful puppets and props along with quiant noisemakers that charmed the audience of several dozen children and adults. There was a lot of laughing and groaning from the audience at the humorous quips by the actors.

Other area residents who were responsible for making the event possible were Paul and Ruth Vierling, Althe Faracy and Chris Engstrom. There are plans to make sure that the puppet troupe will return to Dayton’s Bluff next year.

Light a Candle

by Ed Lamber
District council executive director

A number of public and private developers are active in Dayton’s Bluff rehabilitating and building homes. The city of St. Paul is among them, and it also demolishes some properties to make the site available for new construction if the property is too far gone to rehab.

We also continue to see home owners taking advantage of low-cost rehabilitation and purchase/rehab funds to acquire and/or improve properties this summer.

The Forum has previously reported on the work of the two most active developers in Dayton’s Bluff, the City of St. Paul and Dayton’s Bluff Neighborhood Housing Service, both of which play leading role in the Invest Saint Paul (ISP) housing program targeted at Dayton’s Bluff and several other areas of the city.

Another developer, Habitat for Humanity, purchased and rehabbed a home at 1071 Bush Avenue in July. Just down the street, Habitat also built a starter home with many attractive features. These are but a few of the improvements that are taking place.

The trend is clearly headed up in Dayton’s Bluff as we continue to see remarkable new and/or existing housing opportunities here.

In the months ahead we will report on these housing developments and improvements going on in many parts of the community. We will also profile other related ISP activities focused on economic development, education, and other aspects of community life in Dayton’s Bluff.

Five years from now, 2010 will be a special time for those taking advantage of this remarkable new and/or existing housing opportunities here.

Save Energy and Money at Home!

This September, residents of Dayton’s Bluff have a unique opportunity to participate in a home energy efficiency program that can save hundreds of dollars per home.

The program, Neighborhood Energy Service, works to make you more comfortable at home, save you money and conserve energy.

The Dayton’s Bluff’s workshop is scheduled for September 21 at 6:30 pm at 798 East 7th Street.

At the workshop you’ll be able to schedule a home visit, where the Home Energy Squad will visit your house and install energy-saving materials. Materials include compact fluorescent lights, a programmable thermostat, door weather stripping, and a low flow shower head.

Finally, you’ll receive one year of personalized home energy reports. These custom reports compare your home’s energy use with the average Minnesota home of the same size.

Over 800 households in St. Paul have participated and on average they are saving $120 per year on their energy bills. Since participants only pay $30, the savings are awesome! If residents qualify for energy assistance the whole program is free. This incredible deal is made possible by the generous support of the Minnesota Environmental and Natural Resource Trust Fund.

To participate, call Carl at 612-278-7123 to RSVP. More details about the program can be found at http://nes.mn.org.

Sponsoring partners include the Dayton’s Bluff District Council, the Neighborhood Energy Connection, and the Metro Clean Energy Resource Team at the Green Institute, with additional support from the Center for Energy and the Environment and Xcel Energy.

Fourth of July
by Sage Holben

How does such a person think? How does a mean-spirited person live with himself? Why go to so much work to harm other people? How can anyone be so vindictive and petty? These are questions I asked myself on Sunday, July 4, when I saw that someone had deliberately spread axle grease along approximately 70 feet of concrete wall and fencing that overlooks Mounds Boulevard from the East Fourth Street cul de sac. Also nicely greased was the 40 foot long metal barrier at the curb of the cul de sac.

Throughout the year, people come from all over the city to this site. They come for the magnificent view of our city, with the domed Capitol building and the St. Paul Cathedral. Over the years, it’s been especially popular for viewing Taste of Minnesota’s fireworks display; this prime view draws a multitude of adults and children. As it is, people who thought fireworks would be shown, as usual, on pre-Fourth nights, did come, sat on the barrier, and ended up ruined from the grease. How many more, especially people for whom new clothing is not easily affordable, could have had their holiday and their clothing ruined—let alone their health hazard of children being in direct contact with the grease.

I was attending a 4th Street block party, celebrating Independence Day, when I saw the vandalism that I had heard about earlier. I called the ‘1111’ number and was connected with the fire department. A crew came out and inspected what we thought was motor oil. The firemen said it was axle grease and verified that it appeared to have been purposely smeared. There were large gobs of grease on the barrier, ledges, linkage and fence posts . . . all where people typically sit, lean and place their hands.

The firemen said they had absorbent material for oil spills, but nothing that would absorb the grease. Many of us adults abandoned the Michael Jackson Dance-off, the picnic that Lara Merrill and others had arranged for the day and gathered all the degreasing supplies, scrub brushes, rags and hoses we had, and spent the next several hours scouring the concrete and metal.

Whoever vandalized the area had most likely intended to break up a neighborhood night out. Contrary to that intention, the vandalism brought people together and formed a larger, tighter group of neighbors. Many people who watched the fireworks display that night have no idea how clean their viewing area was. We, who sweated and scrubbed, know; and it’s our pleasure that you all had a great evening. And oh, what a powerful lesson our children learned on that hot, summer, Independence Day!

Summer work trip to El Salvador

Dayton's Bluff residents Alyssa Whitesell and Mary Voigt went on a Habitat for Humanity Global Village trip to Sonsonate, El Salvador from June 19 to June 28. Both are members of Johnson High School’s Habitat Team. Alyssa will begin her senior year at Johnson this fall and plans on using her experience in El Salvador as her senior project. Mary has been a teacher at Johnson for the past five years. Some highlights from the trip include zip lining through the forest canopy, a dip in the hot springs of El Bosque Imposible (the Impossible Forest), swimming every night after a hard day’s work, and of course helping to change two families’ lives for the better!

Boulevard gardens: positive action on your block

by Ed Lambert

District Council Executive Director

The Dayton’s Bluff Community Council is working closely with the city’s Invest Saint Paul (ISP) program to enhance the housing stock in the community, as well as other aspects of Dayton’s Bluff. A big part of the overall effort is to help neighbors take action to improve the appearance and cleanliness of our residential areas.

In July, for example, the council partnered with the youth of Dayton’s Bluff Recreation Center and installed several boulevard gardens using perennial plants and enhanced soil. The council, using funds from the ISP program, has tools, plants and related supplies available to homeowners or renters who will partner with the council and the youth to establish these very attractive enhancements to their blocks. The youth, with help from rec center supervisors and the council, provide the labor, and the homeowner or renter provides the ongoing maintenance.

These gardens are very easy to take care of and they do a great job helping to beautify residential blocks in Dayton’s Bluff. The grass is carefully removed, so it can be used in other areas, enhanced soil and nutrients are added, and then a variety of perennial plants are planted and watered. Some residents add seasonal plants as well, just to add variety to the color and character of the boulevard garden, at their own expense. The materials and installation are free for the basic garden.

Gardens are typically two to three feet wide, between the curb and the sidewalk, and range from four feet to 10-12 feet in length, depending upon the location and the sponsor’s perspective. Other such gardens grow on hillsides or along steps leading to the house. After a year or two, many of these gardens become prominent features of the block they are located in and are often strikingly beautiful.

If you would like to sponsor a garden in front of your home, please contact Karin DuPaul at the council office to learn how you can get one of these lovely gardens at no cost to you (Karin@dayton bluff.org or 651-772-2075). This beautification program also includes help with organizing a “clean-up-fix-up” campaign on your block using ISP funds and teams of volunteers. While the program is focused on those blocks within the ISP target areas in Dayton’s Bluff, the council also has resources to help beautify your block even if your home is not located in an ISP target area.

Junk car removal: Budget Towing of Minnesota will remove your junker and dispose of it at no charge to you. The vehicle owner receives a tax deduction, and the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council will receive a donation. Call 651-772-2075 or email karin@dayton bluff.org.

Fifth annual Parade of Community Gardens

by John Barbie

District council board of directors

On Saturday, August 21, from 10:00 am to 2:00 pm, the Parade of Community Gardens will visit Skidmore Park, our newest community garden. It’s part of an open house celebration and an opportunity for people to learn more about community gardens and to join in a day of food, community and fun activities.

Skidmore will be among over 60 area gardens, including three in Dayton’s Bluff. It’s located at 1085 East 4th Street and is unique due to its raised garden beds constructed of retaining wall blocks. It also features a center raised bed constructed from historic St. Paul paver stones.

The Skidmore Park Community Garden Group is also the recipient of the 2010 Sustainable St. Paul Award presented by Mayor Chris Coleman.

In recognition of the day, the city has proclaimed August 21 as “Community Gardening Day.” The resolution notes that St. Paul is home to over 70 community gardens. The Dayton’s Bluff greenspace committee continues to seek new community garden spots and plans to announce a new location for one on Wilson Avenue soon.

In 1909, the John Doeren Manufacturing Company opened in a new building at 699 East 7th Street. The owner, John Doeren, had been in the cigar business in Dayton’s Bluff since his arrival in St. Paul in the 1880s. Doeren cigars were made by hand, with the workers rolling tobacco leaves, forming the point, chopping off the end, pressing and gluing, to arrive at the finished product. Bales of tobacco were stored in the cool, dark basement, while in the rear of the building a hand pulled elevator was used to lift the large bales.

The Doeren Manufacturing Company closed in the 1940s. Cigar smoking had declined in popularity and small operations could not compete with the larger factories whose modern machines turned cigar making into an automated process.

After a few years, the building became home to the Lind Shoe Company, whose Lind bowling shoes, originally designed for the Hamm’s brewery bowling team, are still made today. Lind occupied the building for 24 years. Later, the building became the eastern home of the St. Paul police, but it has been vacant since the 1990s, although it is still owned by the city. Today the Dayton’s Bluff Vacant Building Committee is evaluating the building and looking into possible reuses. For more information contact Karin at 651-772-2075.
