Is there a story that isn’t being written, or calling 651-776-3320. It’s well worth visiting El Guanaco if you haven’t already been there. And a good time might be on September 15 because they don’t have any meat and are corn rather than flour based.

They also have the very popular pupusas, a traditional Salvadorian treat. They are sort of like tortillas that are stuffed with either meat, beans or cheese in different combinations and cooked on a sort of grill. There is a showcase full of traditional food is prepared. And, like our country’s Fourth of July events, at the end of the day, fireworks light up the skies in El Salvador.

Much of the work is done by Oscar, his wife Margarita and their two daughters, Kesia and Jennifer, who are both going to a restaurant and starting a bakery in the land of his birth.

Like many immigrants, they came to this country for the chance to better their economic conditions. For a time Oscar did of a variety of jobs, including working at McDonald’s and being a chef at a nursing home. But his goal was always to eventually own a business of his own. Five years ago, the family made the move and opened their doors at 849 East 7th Street. They decided to name their venture El Guanaco Bakery and Café because this is a nickname for Salvadorians.

The business has been successful even though sometimes the sales have been lower than hoped. According to Oscar, “things are pretty slow in the summer.” He is glad they do a lot of wholesaling of breads and pastries to local Latino grocers because they make more from that than from the walk-in trade.

Many of the Murcias will also cater for parties, business meetings and other events. You can set something up by dropping by the store are quesadillas, something people also find at Mexican restaurants. The ones Oscar and his family make taste different because they don’t have any meat and are corn rather than flour based.

If you wish there were a place in the neighborhood to go for frosty treats, you need look no further. Ice cream and sorbets are now available. There are also special Salvadorian tamales that are made every Saturday.

Gina Stokes takes care of Dayton’s Bluff Recreation Center

by Steve Trimble

Gina Stokes has been looking after the people and programs at the Dayton’s Bluff Recreation Center for almost four years now. It’s time that people get to know more about this energetic young woman. She grew up on the East Side, her family living across from Hayden Heights Elementary School. According to her, it was “a nice place to grow up in and people there took pride in the neighborhood.”

She attended Presentation School through the eighth grade and then went to North St. Paul for high school because she wanted to be part of their softball program and a lot of her friends were going there.

At the suggestion of her aunt, who was involved in athletics for her employment, Gina attended Minneapolis Technical and Community College. She showed up at the right time and became part of the first group who graduated from the school’s new Urban Park Recreation and Youth Development degree.

She explained how the school emphasized that the inner city neighborhoods needed a special approach to their recreation. The students learned about other cultures and how to work with a diverse group. “I could relate to the situations,” she said, “because I had a bit of a troubled youth myself.”

Gina’s first job was at the Hazel Park Recreation Center. She gained experience and after a few years found out that an assistant director job had opened up at Dayton’s Bluff. She jumped at the chance to apply and was promoted into that position. It has been a sometimes difficult but almost always rewarding experience.

She explained that the city budget is shrinking and resources are short. “It’s especially hard to deal with in this neighborhood because of its low income level.” Other areas have parents with more disposable income and can afford to pay fees. “Even so,” she added, “I would never turn anyone away and we make do with what we have.” Another problem is the fact that this is a “high transition neighborhood and often by the time you build relationships with the kids they move away.”

When asked about what positive things have happened during the last few years, Gina stated: “I think one successes is seeing more families come back. We have tried hard to make it more family friendly and to work with the kids and their families to create a safe place.” One of the clues that people feel the center is a nice place to use is the fact that a growing group of local seniors come on Fridays from 12:00 to 4:00 to play cards.

Successes, she said, come from “building relationships with the kids, talking to them, giving them support.” She wants to focus on that and “making it reflect their neighborhood, mostly by talking to people. You don’t want to push things off on them.”

The Center has also been building collaboration with the neighborhood. The youth are becoming involved in many different volunteer activities, anything from raking leaves to mowing lawns for elderly people. They are even help plant area gardens. They are not paid, but after participating then get to go on a field trip.

Last year the recreation center started what became a popular drill team where they do precision marching and moves. They now have a group of thirty or forty who show up. The group took part in the annual Rondo Days event this summer.

Gina has high hopes for the fall programming and is trying to field a soccer team but still needs more people. She wants to do more for the girls and plans to build on the three basketball teams that existed last year. She is also looking to raise funds by having a basketball tournament. And efforts are being made to revive the dormant booster club.

There will be two big events in September. One is a community garage sale on the 17th of the month and people can buy a table to sell things or make donations to help the center. There will also be an East Side Pride/Youth Days that will occur on September 24. It will feature free food, music and entertainment.

If you are interested in joining the booster club, finding out more about the programs at the center or even volunteering, you can call Gina at 651-793-3885. She’ll still be there by the time you read this. Why? “Because,” she stated, “I enjoy the job and the neighborhood and believe me, there’s never a dull day.”

I appreciate your support and look forward to serving you in my next term.

Putting homes in reach with Contract for Deed option
by Paula Unitate
Intern, City of St. Paul

Dayton's Bluff, like most areas in America, is still feeling the effects of the 2008 housing market crash. Dayton's Bluff faces some of the highest foreclosure rates in the Twin Cities. Many homes have lost half their value, and homeowners cannot afford to sell, buy, or finance home improvements. Fewer people are interested in home loans because credit is granted much more sparingly than in the past, and the loans that are granted are much lower than they used to be (while the average used to be $30,000, it is now $25,000).

To offset some of the harmful effects of a sluggish housing and tight credit markets, however, Dayton's Bluff Neighborhood Housing Services (DBNHS) has several programs and activities that assist Dayton's Bluff residents in pursuing homeownership or home improvements. DBNHS also owns many houses that have been recently renovated and are available for purchase through programs such as the Contract for Deed Program.

With the goals of creating affordable housing and revived neighborhoods, the Bridge to Success Contract for Deed Program aids potential homebuyers who need some assistance in financing and purchasing. This program, funded by Family Housing Services and University Bank, reaches out to homebuyers who, in a tightening credit market, fall just short of qualifying for a mortgage. A “contract for deed” is a three-year lease-to-own program. After three years of leasing, the tenant must purchase the property. Instead of relying on a bank for a loan, however, the seller of the property finances the purchase.

In addition to upholding an agreement to buy, the homebuyer must take part in homeownership education and financial counseling, which covers savings, credit scores, mortgages, etc. This counseling is intended to prepare future homebuyers for the responsibility, challenges, and opportunities of owning a home. Specifically, the counseling ensures that the purchaser is mortgage-ready after three years.

DBNHS currently has eight houses in the Contract for Deed program that are ready for interested homebuyers. Contact DBNHS at 651-774-6995.

Metropolitan State commemorates 9/11

by Harvey Mayer

For the third consecutive year, Metropolitan State University will commemorate the 9/11 tragedy and sponsor an associated Day of Service.

Under its “United We Serve” banner, the university’s Center for Community-Based Learning (CCBL) is coordinating a Friday, Sept. 9 presentation at the Saint Paul Campus entitled, “Pandemonium at the Pentagon: From Warrior to Scholar.” Metropolitan State student Abdul Sanne-Aryibi is scheduled to discuss his role in providing security and support as a U.S. Marine who was one of the first to respond to the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon.

Sanne-Aryibi, a post-baccalaureate graduate student enrolled in the university’s Urban Teaching Program, plans to talk about his first-hand observation of the immediate aftermath of perhaps the most memorable attack on U.S. soil. On the 10th anniversary of 9/11, Sanne-Aryibi is also expected to discuss how the tragedy significantly influenced his academic, career, and personal goals.

“As an educational institution, Metropolitan State welcomes the opportunity to educate students, faculty, staff, and the community about the events of 9/11,” said Evelyn Roloff, assistant CCBL director. “This presentation by Abdul Sanne-Aryibi will provide the campus community and the public with the opportunity to hear and reflect upon his unique and compelling story. We are honored he selected Metropolitan State for his higher-education needs and is sharing his 9/11 experience in this event.”

As part of the 12:00 noon-to-1:00 pm presentation in the campus auditorium, Metropolitan State President Susan K. Hammersmith will deliver welcoming remarks. Additionally, Roloff said, “powerful” videos and illuminating factoids of and about 9/11 will be featured in the Sept. 9 event, which is free and open to the public.

Also under the “United We Serve” banner, the university is sponsoring its third annual Day of Service on Thursday, Sept. 15. On that date, faculty, staff, and students will volunteer at community-service projects, including some that will occur on the East Side. This event marks a response to President Obama’s 2009 call for Americans to serve the country by volunteering in the community.

At last year’s Day of Service, more than 70 people volunteered in community-service projects ranging from planting community gardens to performing handyman chores. This year, said Roloff, the CCBL is reaching out to more student groups to encourage volunteerism.

Rolloff observed that both the Sept. 9 and 15 events demonstrate Metropolitan State’s ongoing commitment to serving the community, especially the East Side. She noted that an “unwavering commitment to civic engagement” is enshrined in the university’s vision statement.

For more details about these events, contact Metropolitan State’s Center for Community-Based Learning at cbl.center@metrostate.edu or 651-793-1285.

Input from the Eastside shapes Gateway Corridor study

by the Gateway Corridor Commission

In late July, residents and local businesses had the opportunity to review revised transit options to better connect the nearly 300,000 people living between the Twin Cities and western Wisconsin. The transit options were presented at an open house held at the Dayton’s Bluff Public Library. Attendees were asked to weigh in on the eight transit options and proposed station locations.

Feedback from residents of Dayton’s Bluff and other Eastside neighborhoods, as well as local government officials, revealed strong support for providing more transit options in the corridor as well as challenges regarding the impacts to local streets.

The study team will be analyzing the feedback received and will be recommending changes to be made to the transit options where appropriate. The next step of the study will begin by analyzing cost, ridership estimates and potential environmental impacts for each of the transit options. This phase of the study will be completed in the fall 2011. For more information, visit www.gatewaycorridor.com.
The Peace and Justice Committee of Sacred Heart Church has been active in the support of SOA Watch. On November 16, 1989, at the University of Central America in San Salvador, six Jesuit priests, their cook and her daughter were brutally killed by elements of the El Salvador army. Subsequent investigations linked many of the officers involved in this atrocity, as well as many others that occurred in Latin America, to the School of the Americas (SOA) then located at Fort Benning in Columbus, Georgia. Efforts were initiated by Latin American human rights activists to call attention to the school and call for it to be closed. Since 1995, rallies have been held around the November 16 date as people from all parts of the world have gathered in Columbus for the commemoration.

Several years ago, the SOA was closed but reopened soon after under the name Western Hemisphere Institute of Security Cooperation, now called WHINSEC. Human rights advocates maintain that the name change meant nothing, as the function of the school in training repressive forces in Latin America remains the same, and they call for it to be permanently closed. The Peace and Justice Committee of Sacred Heart Church has been active in the support of the vigil. Francie Carr, Joan Bergman, Art Marty (now deceased) and Wayne Wittman have taken many Veterans For Peace bus trips to the rally over the years. The bus trip leaves on Friday morning, travels all night and gets to Columbus, Georgia Saturday morning. Arrangements are made for hotel accommodations in Columbus. Participants attend many spiritual, educational and social events on Saturday afternoon and evening. On Sunday there is a funeral procession honoring some of the known victims of the military atrocities committed by the soldiers trained at the SOA.

The program usually ends late Sunday afternoon and bus riders return to their bus, spend the night on the bus and get back to town Monday evening. This year the Veterans For Peace bus leaves from Saint Stephen’s parking lot in Minneapolis at 8:00 am Friday, November 18, and returns on Monday, November 21.

The cost is $200.00 for the bus and the hotel room is $100.00, but efforts are made to arrange room sharing for up to four to a room. Persons who wish to know more about the program can contact Joan Bergman at 651-774-0595 or Francie Carr at 651-772-4513 for information. For trip information, contact Wayne Wittman at 651-774-4608.

Wayne Wittman is a long-time member of Sacred Heart Church.

Classroom training lasts eight weeks and includes topics such as operations management, marketing, financial management, how to create a successful business and how to prepare a business plan. In addition, each student will have eight hours of one-on-one time with the instructor to work on individual business concepts. Those who successfully complete the course and locate their businesses in target neighborhoods are eligible for ongoing business support services.

The registration fee is based on a sliding scale. Class size is limited, so don’t wait to apply. For an application, see the contact information at far right.

American Bald Eagles of Indian Mounds Park

It is the beginning of August 2011, and I am sitting on my deck in my back yard writing this article. At the moment, I am listening to the adult eagle calling for the young eaglet to return to the nest for food. At the same time I am hearing black walnuts hit the ground as the little red squirrel has been dropping them from the tree. It is a very pleasant evening, about 70 degrees. This is quite a change from the high 90 degrees with the extreme humidity.

My first encounter with an eagle was when I was in Wyoming hunting mule deer. Apparently I was a little too close to an eagle nest. I was sitting on a cliff and just under me is where the nest must have been as the eagles flying around me were scolding me with their shrill, eerie cry. And now I have eagles right across the street from my house. The eagles do not pay any attention to any of the neighborhood residents or any daily activities in the neighborhood.

People have stopped by my house many times asking several questions about the eagles as they observe the nest. Here are a few statistics about the American Bald Eagle. The American Bald Eagles are among the largest birds of prey in the world. What a beautiful bird to have as a member of 2½ inches long to 12 pounds, the female being the larger of the two. They stand 30 to 35 inches tall from the top of their head to the tip of their tail. Their beaks are 2½ inches long with a hook of an inch or more for ripping their food. Their feet are yellow in color, with long curved talons for grasping or catching their food. The mature adults have a white tail and head, and mate for life. They are dark brown-black in color with various shades. They don’t get their white crown and tail until they are about four years old. Their wing span is six feet and more. They mate in February, flying very high in the sky. I have witnessed this twice, and sometimes they are so high you can hardly see them.

The eggs are laid in March and incubation is about thirty to forty days to hatching time. The female lays the eggs but the male and female both take turns keeping them warm during incubation time. The eggs are three inches by two inches, twice the size of chicken eggs. They are white in color and turn yellow in the nest during incubation. The young eagles are greyish white in color and as they mature they lose the fluffy down and get their flight feathers which are brown with streaks of white until they become an adult.

The baby eagles are called eaglets and when they begin to fly they are called juveniles. The correct name for the nest is the Eyrie pronounced Air-ee. As a rule they only lay two eggs; it is very rare to have three eggs. The first one hatched is larger and more dominant and will take more than its share of food and attack the smaller one repeatedly and may even kill it and eat it. So to have two eaglets survive from the hatching is remarkable. Life span of the eagles is twenty to fifty years.

The scenario on our neighborhood birds of prey all began back on a Sunday morning in February 2009. One of the adults flew into a cottonwood tree on Burns Avenue. This tree frequented the neighborhood trees, deciding where to build their nest. They picked a white pine tree where the top was broken off during a previous winter storm. They started bringing in sticks and tried to build their nest some of the course falling to the ground, but the sticks that stayed together resembled a nest in progress. Then heavy equipment started arriving to work on Burns Avenue to complete the new pavement. This heavy equipment with all the noise caused them to leave for the 2009 season. When the street work was completed in October 2009 it was apparent they wanted to take up residence in the neighborhood as they returned and started building once again.

In the spring of 2010, nature called the eagles to their mating rituals and they mated and returned to their nest in the neighborhood for the female to lay the eggs. In April two eaglets were hatched. In June they started to exercise their wings and hopping around the nest, testing their skills to fly. It was July 16, 2010 when the little ones took off flying. One was successful and the other not so lucky as it crashed landed up the street on Burns and was rescued and taken to the Raptor center where it was nursed back to health and released in Red Wing in November 2010.

Fast forward to the spring of 2011; nature took its course and we had another family of two eaglets hatch in April. It was obvious that these two really wanted to fly and fly and not injure themselves. They practiced hopping with wings flapping like little helicopters over the nest. I was worried about the July 4 fireworks and they appeared to be nervous as well as if the adults stayed there all night. On July 5, one of the eaglets took its leap of faith to one of the branches in the pine tree. On July 6, the other eaglet took its leap of faith to a branch. This continued to be their daily exercise and ritual to test their flying abilities. On July 16, they took their first flights out of the pine tree to another tree in the neighborhood across the street and it was another pine tree. This first flight was on the same date as it was in 2010. During one of our severe wind storms with lightning and heavy rain, I watched as one was in the nest and the other clinging on to a branch and every so often flexing its wings to keep its balance as the wind blew the branch a little vertical. Now that the juveniles can fly, the adults still gather food and bring it to the nest, calling the young to come and eat.

The adults bring food and tear the food in small pieces for the eaglets for about six weeks. As juveniles, they do not know how to catch their own food or even where to find it. They learn by watching the adults. The adults continue to bring food to the juveniles for months. The adults have left many leftovers from their meals in my back yard, such as catfish heads, feathers from pigeons, snake skins, fur from squirrel, rabbit and even cats. They are not fussy as to what they eat, whether it is fresh or rotten road kill. They have to be very hardy to survive snow, sleet, hail, rain and eating rotten food. The parents are very protective over the young eaglets, shading them from the hot sun, giving them shelter from the kids and rain and hail by hovering over them with their wings spread. They do not drink anything except the moisture that comes from their food. It is surprising how they can survive the 100 degree temperatures without water. NATURE IS MAGNIFICENT.

We should feel very fortunate to live in a neighborhood to have this marvelous sight. We are probably the only one or at least one of the very few in an urban setting to have this privilege. Hopefully you’ll hear from me next year at this time with news of another hatching.

In July we had a scare as an injured adult eagle was spotted in Mounds Park. Neighbors thought it might be one of ours but it wasn’t, as we have spotted both of our adults back in the nest feeding their juveniles. Keep your eye to the sky and you may just see one flying overhead.

Cuba remains mysterious; not so untouchable by Carla Riche

“Been to Cuba Lately?” That’s the title of a Huffington Post article by actor Mike Farrell. His answer is, appropriately enough, “Oh, that’s right, you’re only a U.S. citizen; you can’t.” But actually some U.S. citizens do manage to get there. I’m one of ’em.

Last April I was able to squeeze myself into one of the coveted travel categories that our government has created to make it difficult for us for get there. The Cubans, on the other hand, welcome us with warmth and hospitality.

I went to Cuba as part of a wonderful group of filmmakers and writers, mostly Minnesota-based, who visited the island for 10 days to coincide with Cuba’s international festival of “poor cinema,” featuring low-budget, independent films from all over the world. While there, we met with ordinary Cubans and also visited art galleries and studios, churches and historic sites and made a side trip to Santiago de Cuba, on the southern part of the island. We also ate some pretty great food and saw some amazing music, dance and films.

One of the things that surprises many first-time visitors to Cuba is the depth of its immersion into art and culture of all kinds. There are fine or low-cost performances, exhibitions and lectures everywhere. Walking down a Havana street, you are likely to glance through a museum de performances, exhibitions and lectures everywhere. Walking down a Havana street, you are likely to glance through a

Any luck at the State Fair?

Forum staff report

It’s Minnesota State Fair time again. The Forum would like to hear from anyone who entered an exhibit in the State Fair or the Ramsey County Fair, whether it won a ribbon or not. Remember, as reported in our July issue, these competitions can yield both fame and fortune for the exhibitor. So maybe the fame is nominal and the fortune is almost non-existent, but you might as well make the most of it while you can.

In that regard, Greg Costimini entered his “A Century Ago in Dayton’s Bluff” postcard collection in this year’s Ramsey County Fair. He won a second place red ribbon in the Collections category and a check for three whole United States dollars. Along with his first place (blue) and sweepstakes (purple) ribbons from last year’s State Fair, he has now accumulated a whopping $19 dollars in total prize money.

A summer to remember

The heat; the rain; the beetles... and does anyone else feel like we're still recovering from last winter? Summer 2011 brought both joy and heartbreak to Dayton's Bluff.

Here, we bring you some snapshots from the summer. Enjoy, and keep in mind that your submissions are welcome any time at editor@daytonsbluff.org.

Left: A young Dayton's Bluff resident feels the weight of St. Paul police officer Tina Kilk's uniform cap and bulletproof vest. Kill was a big hit at the National Night Out celebration at 4th Street and Bates on August 2.

Above: The first of four August rallies, held by the Eastside Neighbors for Peace at the corner of Mounds and 6th Street.

Right: Roger Tetu, of 1087 Margaret Street, was killed July 26 in a hit-and-run accident while on his way back from cleaning this field at Margaret Rec Center. Tetu was often seen in the neighborhood cleaning up trash, making an effort to keep the community strong.

At bottom: A member of Open Eye Figure Theatre (and co-author of the show) sprays the audience with water at the August 8 performance of Cow Boat at Mounds Park. Dayton's Bluff ECFE sponsored the performance, which was well-attended by area families.
